

A Little Help For Our Friends

David Darcy is a well respected Sydney photographer who has had several books published and has been featured in various magazines, including Urban Animal. For over a decade David's preferred subjects have been dogs.

"My inspiration for photographing dogs is borne from the bond I share with our four-legged friends, my passion for photography and a desire to portray dogs in a respectful manner (the way most of us know and remember our mates) without silly props and gimmicks." says David.

David's best selling books, Mongrel and Outback Mongrel are best-sellers. David recently went to India to help document the work that Vets Beyond Borders do to improve the health and welfare of animals in developing countries. His images are a haunting reminder of how man's best friend doesn't always have it so good. The imagery can be seen and purchased from his site www.mongrel.com.au

Friends in need

Days Long Gone

In a positive show of support for Vets Beyond Borders, David has published a book called A Little Help for Our Friends. This little book is dedicated to the street dogs that the organization cares through its charitable work. Proceeds from the sale of each book go to support the work of Vets Beyond Borders.

As David states, A Little Help for Our Friends brings together some of my favourite photos of loved pets in Australia and around the world. It takes a look at life from the dogs' perspective. I hope it brings a smile to your face and reminds you of your best friend."
